Who's Who

Developer

The developer is the company that originally purchased the property and then established the association and created the legal documents by which the association operates. The developer remains in control of the association until it is turned over to the homeowners. Once turnover occurs, a Board of Directors is elected by the homeowners to oversee the management of the association. Turnover normally occurs once a high percentage of homes have been sold.

Homeowners Association (HOA)

This is you! The homeowners comprise the association, which is represented by a Board of Directors. Membership of the association is mandatory and comes with buying property within the association. You cease to be a member of the HOA when you sell your property. The new owner of the property will then become a member. When you close on your home you become a member of your HOA and agree to abide by its restrictive covenants and pay assessments.

Board of Directors

The initial Board of Directors is appointed by the developer. Once the association turns over from developer control, the Board of Directors will be comprised of homeowners elected by the community. When an owner sends a question or complaint to the management company, or if there is a major violation, the management company presents this information to the Board of Directors. The Board makes all major decisions for the community by holding meetings at their discretion where all homeowners are welcome to attend. Each association holds an annual meeting (to elect Board members) and a budget meeting (where the Board approves the budget).

Management Company

ICON Management Services, Inc. is your management company. ICON assigns a Community Association Manager to your property—they are supported by a Regional Director and the ICON accounting department.

The management company takes direction from the Board of Directors and does not make major decisions for the community. They assist the Board in the day to day management of the association, providing customer service to the residents when questions or concerns arise. Homeowners should contact the management company with any questions, comments or concerns related to the Association.
