Hurricane Preparation

By the time the 2020 Atlantic hurricane season officially began on June 1, two named storms had already developed in the tropics. Management has prepared a comprehensive hurricane preparedness plan – click here to view. This document is also available on the community website.

We realize there is a lot of information contained, but please take the time to review all of the information. Doing it now, before there is a concern, will prepare each of you, if at some point we do find ourselves involved with a storm.

Proper preparation is the key to success.

Hurricane Trivia: What's a named storm? According to the National Hurricane Center, names are only given to tropical storms that have sustained wind speeds higher than 39 mph.
